BEFORE I LEAVE MEDICAL COLLEGE

Medical College Is More Than a Training Ground for Doctors

THE QUESTION

We train doctors. But is that all a medical college should aspire to do?

A reflection from within medical education.

DR. SIDHARTH NARAYANAN

Are we getting the most out of undergraduate medical education?

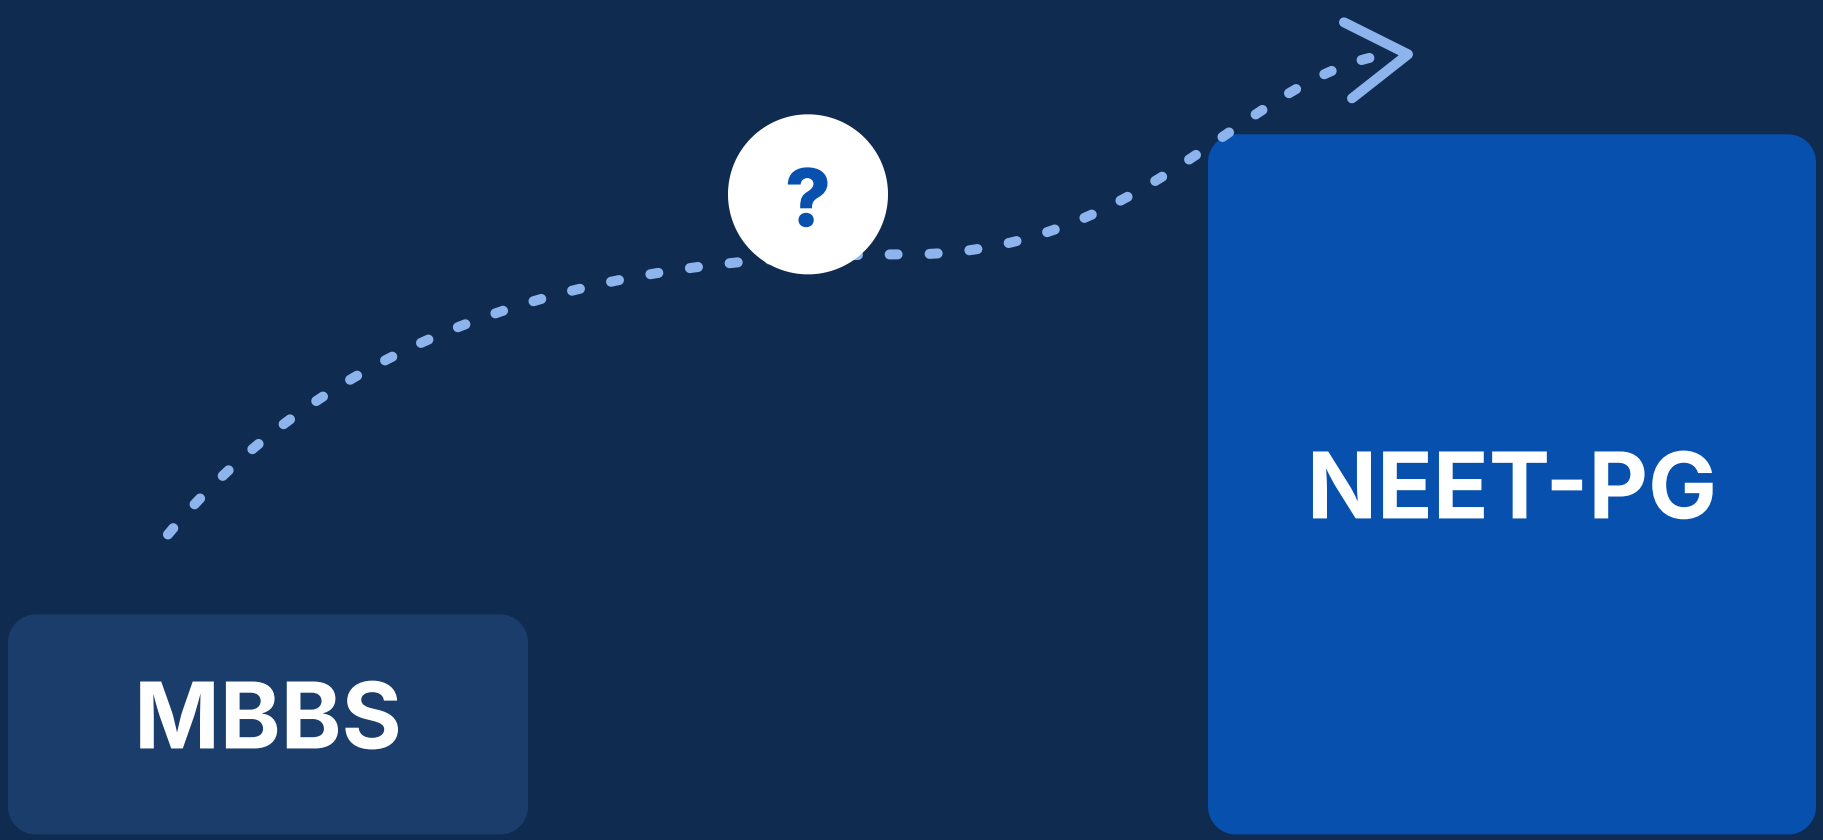

1. Lectures
2. Practical examinations
3. University examinations
4. Clinical postings

? What are we missing?

THE PERCEPTION

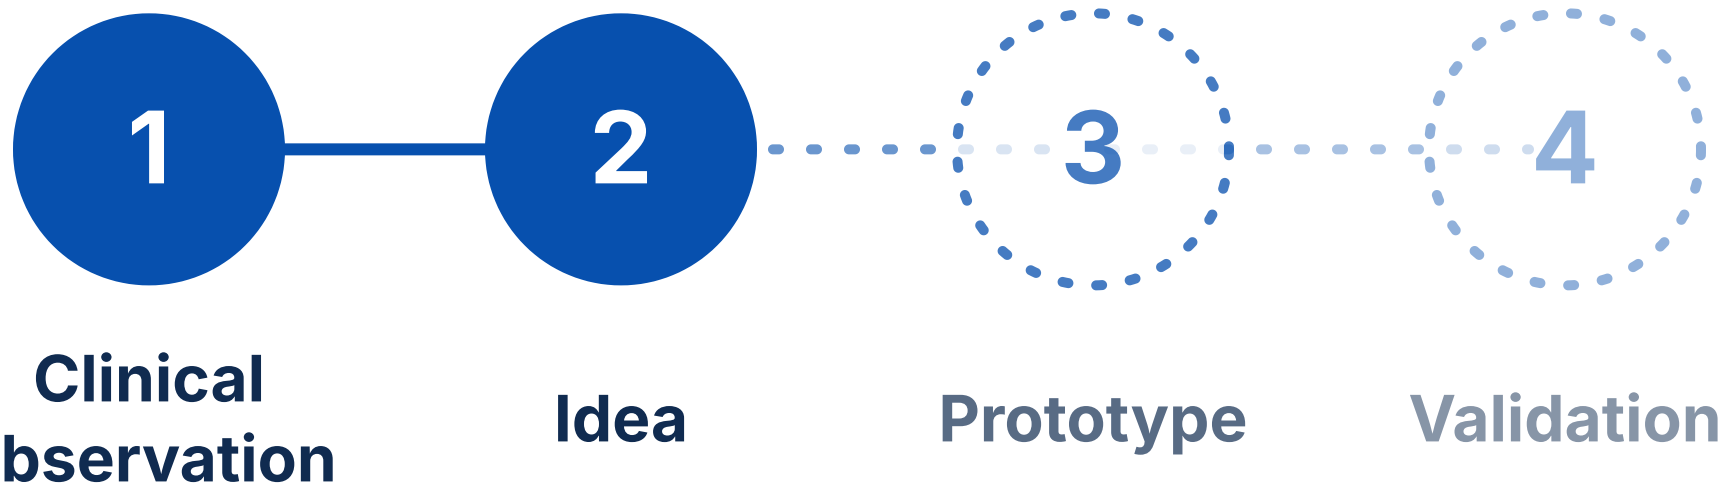

Has MBBS become a stepping stone to NEET-PG?

...rather than an experience students fully value in itself?

THE UNTAPPED OPPORTUNITY

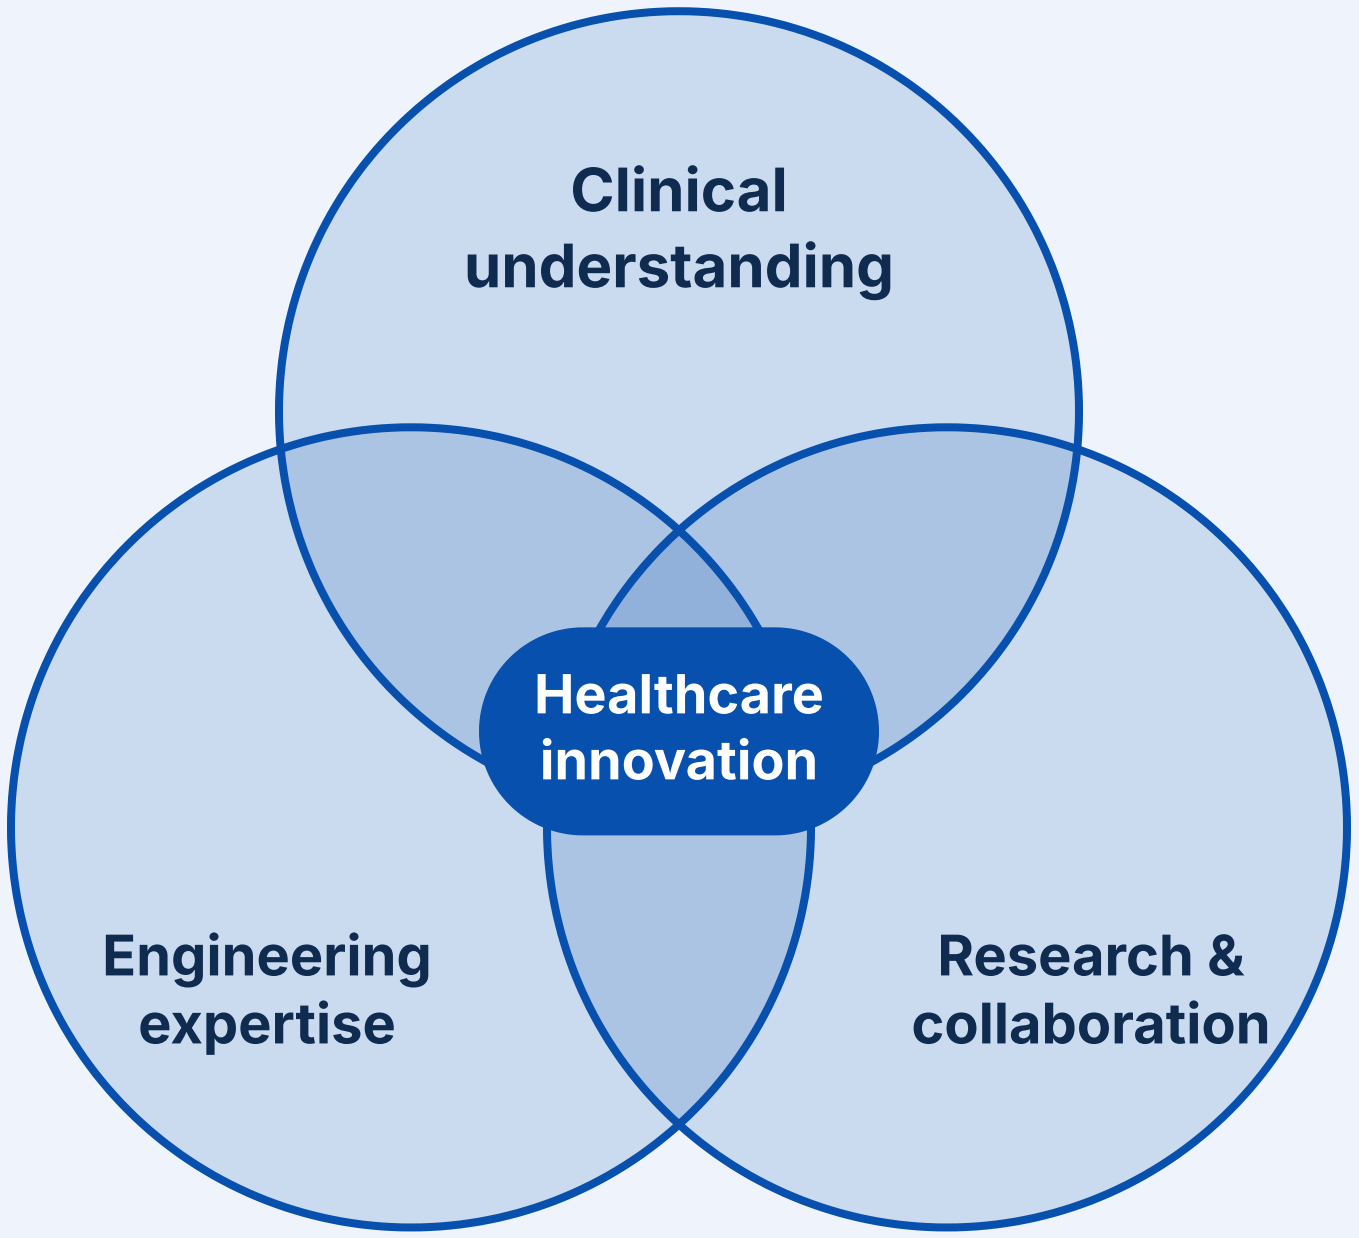

Students see clinical problems every day. What happens to the solutions they imagine?

The pathway exists. The support often doesn’t.

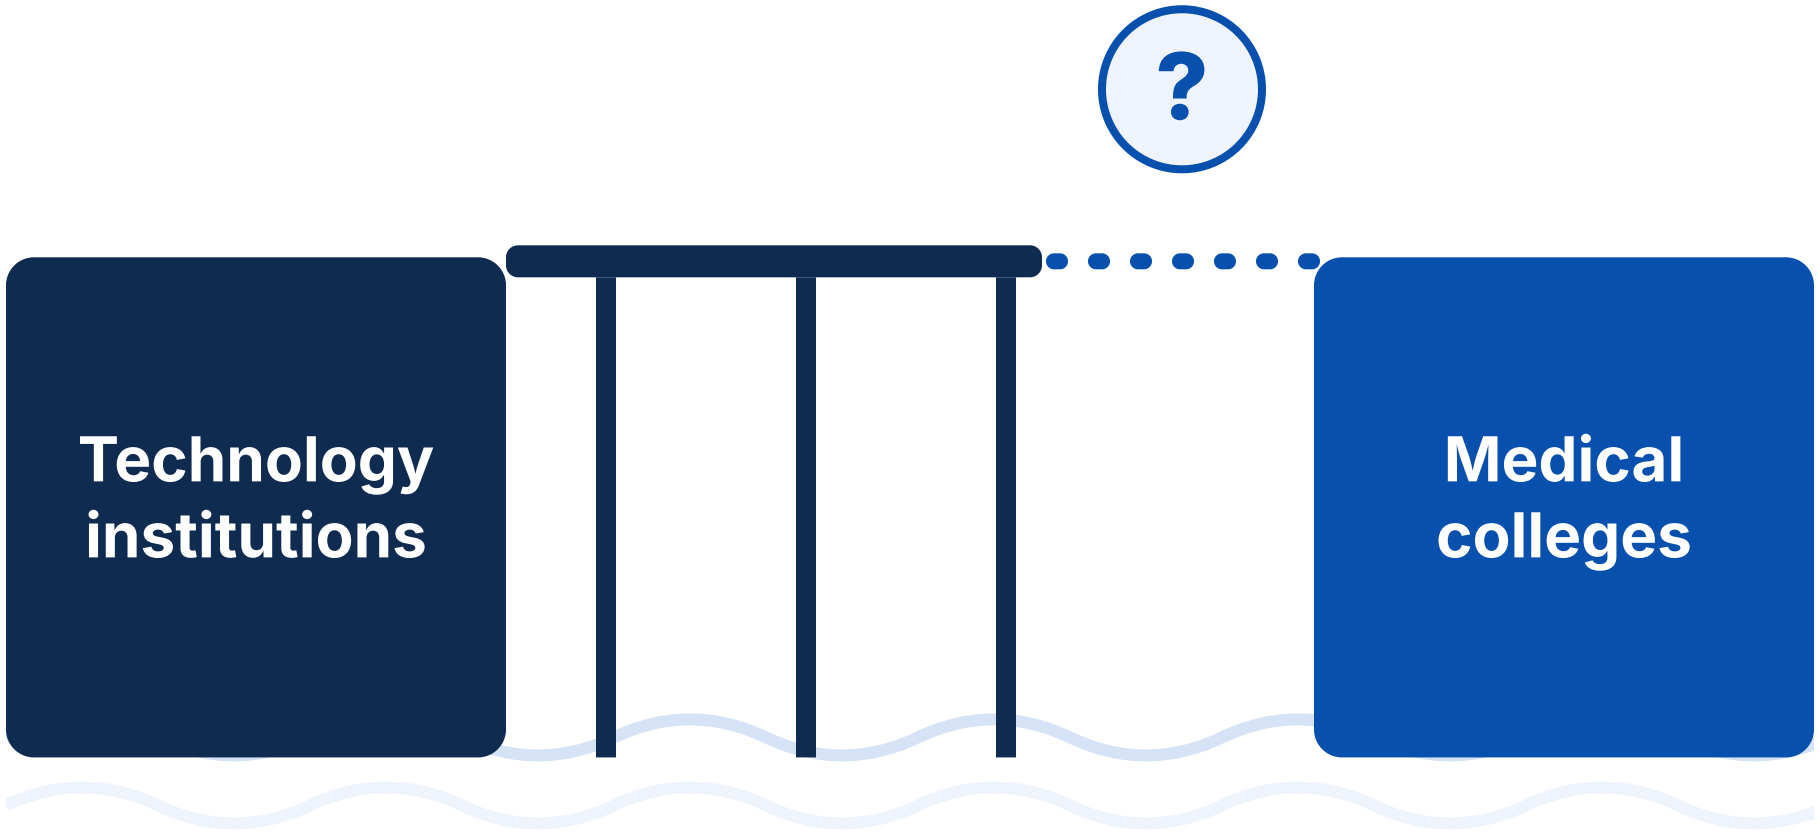

THE MISSING BRIDGE

Clinical understanding needs to meet engineering expertise.

THE REVERSE TREND

Technology institutions are building bridges towards medicine. What about the other direction?

Initiatives at IIT Madras, IIT Kharagpur and IIT Kanpur are bringing medical sciences and technology closer together.

WHAT WE NEED

Not another compulsory subject.

An environment that makes research and innovation possible, for students who want to explore.

→

An environment that supports exploration

WHAT IT COULD LOOK LIKE

A medical student with the people and tools to try.

CAPABILITIES BEYOND CLINICAL PRACTICE

What medical college builds can be applied far beyond the clinic.

WHAT TRAINING BUILDS

- Working under pressure
- Deciding with incomplete information
- Managing competing responsibilities
- Working within resource limits

WHERE IT CAN APPLY

- Healthcare research
- Product development
- Entrepreneurship
- Healthcare operations

THE BIGGER VISION

Two things, together.

FIRST

Improve the education we provide.

SECOND

Expand what medical education can enable.

A medical college should be more than a place where we learn medicine. It should be a place where we learn what we can do with it.
